THE KEY NOTE.

The action of the democratic state central committee in calling the state convention to meet in Springfield, June 4, means a great deal when viewed to the light of the discussion which preceded. The principal question of interest was the proposition that the state convention nominate a candidate for United States Senator, to receive the vote of all democrats elected to the next legislature. While it was not within the province of the state committee to incorporate this in its call, the discussion showed as plainly as could be that the sentiment in favor of the proposition was well nigh unanimous.

A resolution was introduced and passed without a dissenting voice calling on the various county conventions which will elect delegates to the state convention, to decide at the time of their meeting, whether or not they are in favor of the state convention nominating a candidate for United States Senator. This decision in the various county conventions will be the nature of instructions to the delegates chosen. So that when a vote on the matter at Springfield is taken there can be no doubt that the action of that convention will represent the wishes of the democracy of Illinois. The apportionment of delегates was fixed at one delegate for each 400 votes for Cleveland and Thurman, or majority fraction.

The action of the state committee will meet with the hearty approval of the bone and sinew of the democratic party, all over the prairie state. Of the result there can hardly be the shadow of a doubt. When the democrats assemble in state convention and the question is but to a vote, the great principle of popular sovereignty will receive such a triumphant vindication as will cause a shout of joy to go up from every hamlet in the land. There has long been a strong feeling among thinking men of both parties, and especially among the farmers and laboring men that United States senators should be chosen by the popular vote. Constitutional limitations prevent the accomplishment of this without an amendment to the constitution, but practically the same result can be obtained by having the same delegates—fresh from the people—nominate a candidate for the U. S. Senate just as they nominate candidates for state officers. The action of the democracy on this point will force an issue.

If it is in order, THE REVIEW would like to inquire of its esteemed contemporary, The Herald-Dispatch, and of Dr. Calhoun, its political editor, whether to be "republican in the best sense" indicates a belief that a tariff is not a tax.

Sum the proposition of the street railway lines makes it an easy thing for both city and county officers to walk in the path of duty. We must provide a breathing place for the future. Now is the time to do it.

A PUBLIC park is a public necessity. The fair grounds is the place of all places for a park. It is the duty of Decatur to acquire these grounds, and it is the duty of the county commissioners to sell the fair grounds for park purposes for a reasonable sum. The proposition of the street railway

Enough space (if I could afford it) to give a complete list of my best bargains, but can only name a few:

THE AFTERNOON.

A solo by Mr. Greenwood, with a chorus by the choir, "I Shall Be Satisfied," opened the afternoon meeting, which was as well attended as usual. After prayer by Rev. W. H. Prestley, Mr. Greenwood sang, "Help Just a Little." Mr. Mills took for his text, "He preached unto them Jesus," from Acts viii:35. The speaker related the circumstances that preceded the words of the text. How Philip was preaching in Samaria with prospects of converting many thousands, when the spirit of God moved him to go down in the desert. Apparently there was nothing to do there, but he went. Then he saw the eunuch. It was in a public road, with many people passing, and Philip was a stranger to him. Yet when his spirit told him, he ran to the eunuch and asked what seemed to be a very impudent question: "Understandest thou what thou readest?" The result is well known. The man made was that Philip didn't hesitate, or say wait till some other time, when he heard the command to speak. He went and did it at once, without considering the time or place. That is the lesson to be learned—his feelings are not to be regarded too much when there is work to be done. If one lives next to God he will be directed in all things.

The weather was too unpleasant a night to make necessary the two meeting pokes of the night before. As it was, though, the main room was filled as full as could be.

The services were begun by a solo by Mr. Greenwood, which is not in any book the chorus was, "O! it must be the break out of the day; the night is almost gone, and day is coming on. It must be the breaking of the day." The audience learned that much and sang it. For the first time Mr. Mills made the opening prayer.

After Mr. Mills made the announcement, to day and to-morrow, Mr. Greenwood sang, "Though Your Sons Be as Scarlet, Let the Savior In," was sung by the congregation. As the people became more familiar with the songs they sing them with more spirit. The singing is getting to be one of the most enjoyable parts of the service.

"Seek ye the Lord while He may be found" (Isaiah 46:3) was the text. Here it is: Mr. Mills said, that does not need explanation. He did not believe there was any one who did not understand it. Every word stood out with its own meaning clear and distinct. The first word, "seeks," itself meant a great deal. A man might as well say he could let his business take care of itself and he would be prosperous, as to think he could find God without seeking him. There is not a man but knows that if he will seek God he will find him. It is the seeking God. Men will suffer all hardships to find gold. When men want God as bad as they want gold, they will find him. At an after meeting which Mr. Mills once attended an old lady came in. Her room walked back and forwards before the people and looked up and down the aisle. Finally she said, "You must excuse me, I have lost my pocket book and it has $4 in it. I thought I must try to find it. Now there were men and women in the room who were afraid to go down stairs to find God because they were afraid of being conspicuous. So they stood upstairs and probably lost their souls, while that old lady went down for her $4. It's not worth while to have some sort of earnestness about this matter. There isn't any sort of shadiness or procras-tination that ought to keep you from seeking God. Be sure you leave this house, if you will seek him you will find him.

Some people get the idea that if they get God they will be filled with happiness, and so they seek that. Now, you don't want to give any care to that at all. Leave that to God. He will give you all happiness, and all peace. Christ said so, but he didn't say you should seek that. The speaker didn't know how people lived without God. There are some people who, without God, get down in depths of despair. He was one of that kind. "Without God in this world," were words which to him looked terrible. Not to know which way to turn when he came to the diverging paths in life; to have nothing on which he could lean, would be disastrous indeed.

"While he may be found." That must mean something. It seems to imply a time when he may not be found. The Bible says, "They shall seek me, but they shall not find me." "Then shall they call on me, but I will not answer." There were the foolish virgins, who knocked after the door was shut. If you had a child and it should die, you would not put it in the grave until all signs of life were gone. It is so with your soul. God won't put it beyond saying so long as it is in life, but it will die. The speaker didn't know where men got that idea that our probation ends with death. Souls might be saved even after that, but he thought they would all die spiritually before that time. You can't tell when your light will go out. The mighty God says now is the acceptance, and now you shall come to salvation. For most of those in this meeting, God's time has already gone by. If you search this book you will not find a place where it says the days of youth are not God's time. "Call ye upon him while he is near." "Seek ye the Lord while he may be found." These are solemn words. If you don't heed them, perhaps he may never be found for you.

A man once went into the Mammoth Cave. He wouldn't take any guide but instead took a ball of twine, and a lamp well filled. He was gone several days before any one missed him. Then people went to look for him. He was found on his knees. He had died of starvation. Over by the wall was his lamp, still nearly full of oil, but it was out. Inside it were two matches. One broken, the other wouldn't burn. It had been ruined by moisture. That told the story. The man had wounded his twin, but while he was examining the formation in the rock, a gust of wind blew out the lamp. He tried to light it, but he failed. Then he searched for the twin. It was there, but in the hopeless darkness he could not find it. The story, told graphically as it was by Mr. Mills, made a manifest impression on the congregation, and not a word was missed. He continued: "Do you know that a man may die very near being saved, and not be saved. I never f. It that so forcibly as when I heard that story. He was within two inches of that twin, which meant his salvation, yet he missed it. You will have many opportunities to find God, but you do not know but this is the last one."

Then all who had the slightest desire to find God, were asked to rise a moment, and the few minutes of silence several rose to their feet. The choir began to sing softly without the organ, the hymn beginning, "Why not, why not, why not come to him now?" That was sung over and over, and many more rose to their feet.

THE ANNOUNCEMENTS.

To-day—Ladies' prayer meeting at 3. Men's meeting at Y. M. C. A. rooms at 9. To-night, beginning at 8, a meeting for Sunday school officers and teachers will be held at the First Methodist church, at which Rev. G. D. Voegeli will preach.

WHAT HAS BEEN DONE.

It is estimated that at the meetings in the last week 125 persons have been converted. Mr. Mills does not keep so close a count as do some evangelists. Inquirer's cards are distributed in the audience. On these are the words "I desire to lead a Christian life from this day forward," with blanks for name, residence and church preference. These cards are handed to Mr. Mills. A record is made, and then the cards are distributed among the different churches, according to the preference expressed. The total number of cards handed in are 125, received as follows: Tues-day night (the first night they were distributed) 19; Wednesday, 20; Thursday, 43; Friday, 34.
